

Pronunciation Key: (very best way is to use an Arati tape to get the rhythm of the words, the pronunciation, and the inflection. Reading it without hearing it is just about impossible, as the Sanskrit language is based on the vibration of sound. There are many more letters and sounds in the Sanskrit language than there are in English.)

All letters are pronounced. You sing every letter that is there. The syllable generally ends with a vowel. Pronounce the consonant and the vowel together, the next syllable being either a consonant and vowel or just a vowel. These are the vowels as pronounced in Spanish, Italian, or Latin languages. This alliteration is taken from the Arati books produced in India, with as close approximation as is possible.

A guide to pronunciation of vowels is as follows from mid-western American accent:

a as the vowel sound in cut, when held longer a as in cot e as the vowel sound in play i as the vowel sound in sit, when held longer as in we o as the vowel sound in go,
u as the vowel sound in do, when held longer as in zoo
